New technologies have changed the way children spend their free time.

Do you think the advantages of this trend outweigh the disadvantages?

Sample Answer:

There is little uncertainty that technical advances have greatly altered the free time actions of children around the world. In my opinion, this is a definitely negative miracle since the extensive effects of technology on the human being are still largely unidentified.

One of the major benefit of children using technology resist that it can be used for a variety of purposes. This applies not only to outdated usages such as sending emails, doing research online, and watching educational videos but also escalating revolutions like artificial intelligence. The recent arise of applications like ChatGPT now enable all individuals, including children, the chance to make their lives more efficient, productive, and enjoyable. If children are taught accountable usage habits, then they can take perfection of the many advantages and become more experienced learners and future members of society.

However, the psychological complications of habits centered on technology are theoretically simple. Humans have not evolved the ability to properly interact with a digital world and children are especially weak. A child who becomes addicted to a social media application such as TikTok might be less physically active and start to see the world through a virtual viewpoint. This can lead to the development of mild mental conditions related to nervousness and self-esteem, or more extreme ones related to depression and frustration. The sign for this is clearly expressed in the often-cited figures on the rising number of suicide attempts among teenagers and children since the starter of social media platforms.

In conclusion, nevertheless of how technology can be used as a tool, its drawbacks in terms of all-purpose mental health make it a negative overall. Parents must therefore wisely manage their children's screen time.
